FRIENDS OF THE ARMY MEDICAL LIBRARY
Washington, D. C.

REMARKS by Atherton Seidell in presenting the portrait of Colonel Harold W. Jones to the Army Medical Library, May 13, 1944

General Kirk, Ladies and Gentlemen:

The group of Friends of the Army Medical Library for whom I speak, is unique in that instead of being an organization designed for soliciting donations to the Library, as is usual in such cases, its purpose is to sponsor and aid in promoting the wider utilization of the resources of this Library. That is to enable our members and others to get more out of it than in the past. If this were simply a selfish motive, it would not be worthy of those who call themselves "Friends," but it is not, since the only advantage which is sought is the more rapid advancement of medicine by the more wide-spread utilization of the extensive collections of medical literature here assembled.

These collections have been used primarily for the compilation of the Index-Catalogue of The Surgeon General's Library which is the most comprehensive and accurate index of medical literature ever made. This alone would be sufficient justification for all the effort and expense that this Library now represents. Of the million and a quarter medical publications which have been recorded in the Index-Catalogue during the last sixty-odd years, they practically all are preserved here and are available for the use of everyone who can come to consult them. This Library is the one center in the world where can be found practically every publication pertinent to any of the many branches of medical knowledge. Until recently, however, only those persons who live here or are able to come to Washington from time to time have been able to take full advantage of it. Now, thanks to microfilm copying, the printed records in libraries can be made available to those at a distance at practically no greater cost than that required to place them in the hands of the readers who come to the Library.

Today you are invited to inspect the recently enlarged installation for microfilm copying which enables the Army Medical Library to send a copy of any item of its collection to anyone anywhere in our own country or beyond its borders. By means of this equipment, the recorded observations and experiments contained in the publications here assembled, are supplied in a constant stream to all who may have need of them, without removing temporarily or permanently and without loss or damage to a single one of the many thousands of books and pamphlets in its collections. This service is transforming the Army Medical Library from an essentially local institution to one of national and even of international character.

It is especially noteworthy that this is the first library to adopt microfilm copying as an integral part of the service it renders to those engaged in research. This is an event of unusual importance in that it marks the beginning of the extension of service which is destined perhaps, to transform libraries from repositories where the literature may be consulted, to centers from which it is sent out to all who are able to use it for the advancement of learning. In this way, scholars and scientists are spared the effort of going to the library and are enabled to study the published work of others in the quiet of their own familiar surroundings.

The creation by Colonel Harold W. Jones, of this Photoduplication Service which you now see in active operation, accomplished the principal objects for which the Friends of the Army Medical Library were organized. It is therefore fitting that we should show our appreciation in an appropriate manner of such an outstanding service to us personally and to the advancement of medicine. It accordingly becomes my very pleasant duty as Secretary of the group, to present to you in the name of more than one thousand Friends of The Army Medical Library this portrait of Colonel Jones, painted by the eminent artist Rolf Stoll and bearing the inscription -

Colonel Harold Wellington Jones

Librarian 1936-194-

Presented by the Friends of the Army Medical Library in recognition of his contributions to the advancement of medicine and of his interest in extending the Library's service to the field of microfilm copying.
